Existing Otherwise - The Future of Coexistence is the culmination of a yearlong art project in a three-month exhibition and re-schooling program at SCCA Tamale, Red Clay and Nkrumah Voli-ni in Tamale, Ghana. The programme started in Berlin, Galerie Wedding - Raum für zeitgenössische Kunst and Callie's. It includes listening and movement research sessions, art workshops, curatorial tours and insights, and performances by participating artists and collaborators.

EXISTING OTHERWISE IN GHANA.

Groundbreaking steps were taken, when Ibrahim Mahama and his team founded, built, and put into use three awe-inspiring contemporary art venues, THE SAVANNAH CENTRE FOR CONTEMPORARY ART (SCCA Tamale), RED CLAY, and NKRUMAH VOLI-NI, in the Northern Region of Ghana over the past five years. Following this initial process, introducing an international exhibition programme alongside the local cultural engagements is an important next step. While the consequences of the COVID19 pandemic continue to challenge travelling, communication, administration of international art projects as well as artistic exchange and inspiration, the programme serves to resist these and pursues new sustainable ways of international exhibition making and communal envisioning.

Upon the invitation by Ibrahim Mahama, who states “I want to create space for alternative and independent thinking, critical art, and eco-activism here in northern Ghana. This is why we do this exhibition, where we mix artists from Berlin and Tamale who have this approach.”

The first larger international exhibition Existing Otherwise – The Future of Coexistence is now happening at this “powerhouse” for the arts in Tamale under the artistic direction of Solvej Helweg Ovesen and Selom Kudjie (artistic director SCCA Tamale). “Instituting new forms of long-term visionary and artistic exchanges across the art world and developing innovative models for creative space-making, human adaptation, and shared knowledge is what I’m interested in with this project. There is a lot to learn from Ghana.”, Ovesen reflects.

LEARNING FROM GHANA.

Impromptu decision making, creative space-making, letting ecosystems grow on- and into each other.

Existing Otherwise - The Future of Coexistence is an entrepreneurial curating experience, which reminds us how to do art shows from scratch, the value of defining spaces for art as well as the importance of the insistence on gender equal exhibition making practices.

Re-schooling sessions as conceived by Mahama and given by many participating artists enable learning experiences that link artistic and scientific approaches beyond a traditional curriculum. At this point in time, where social welfare and economic systems of the western world are already on the verge of collapsing a.o. due to the ecological crises, there is a lot to learn when working with such entrepreneurial art spaces in Ghana. Alternative exchange models are becoming key today.

Existing Otherwise - the Future of Coexistence is launched by a hybrid curatorial team presenting more than 15 artists from all around the world, who created works relating to notions of ‘existing otherwise’. A shared field of interest amongst the artists and curators is the new creative world-making strategies that may be enabled if we give more space and time for intimate relations to grow and heal as well as to develop new flamboyant uses of existing materials. To exist otherwise is both to repair and to innovate. To inhabit, revisit, and convert failed buildings or pedagogical projects.

So, Existing Otherwise here draws on the notion coined by writer Saidiya Hartman and in this context means experimenting with freedom (even if it is limited) in relation to the body, space, habitus, gender roles, sustainable relations and use of material.

Each of the three exhibition venues is dedicated to artistic presentations and installations as well as gatherings during workshops and performances. Red Clay focuses on hosting the re-schooling programme and a major, space gripping virtual looking landscape work by Tracy Naa Koshie Thompson made of recycled food paste.

Sarah Ama Duah in contrast focuses on the human figure and creates a new inflatable monument, embodied by herself, in local latex.

In Nkrumah Voli-ni, Ana Alenso digs into the subject of amateur gold mining and its relation to resource curses on a global scale. And finally, in SCCA Tamale the group exhibition unfolds as a soft take-over of the whole space, which can be experienced completely differently seeing it from below or above (gallery). This exhibition venue hosts a bunch of colourful, outspoken yet fragile works. Many of them are informed by a contemporary feminist worldviews favouring artistic and human processes of recovery, solidarity, and flourishing. Cyber wellness, beauty as intelligence, gender equality and hybridity - all contemporary themes presented with a healthy twist of psychedelia.

Eli Cortiñas, Hannah Toticki, Sandra Kyeraa, Ato Jackson, Ernest Sackitey, Rosemary Esinam Damalie, Bernard Akoi-Jackson, Selom Kudjie, Sandra Kyeraa and Emily Hunt present collages, textiles, costumes, drawings, paintings, figurines, and film installations that leave room for inner repair, empowerment, and intimacy (also with the works themselves). Anyone who has a soft spot for strong women may appreciate this venue.

BACKGROUND

The exhibition in Tamale marks the culmination of a yearlong project that started in the municipal art space Galerie Wedding – Raum für zeitgenössische Kunst in Berlin, Germany, run by Solvej Helweg Ovesen. For 1,5 years, starting with the first lock-down in Berlin in Spring 2020, the communal art space was occupied by the social welfare office. Reception desks to accommodate people with existential needs were installed in the main exhibition space of the gallery. Thanks to the involved artists' commitment, creativity, perseverance, improvisational talent and collaboration, alternative formats of art presentation were developed over the last 1.5 years of shared use of the premises in Berlin. Ovesen now moves the programme to Tamale, aiming to expand the dialogue internationally.

With Ibrahim Mahama on the curatorial board and as an artist, co-initiator and entrepreneur on-site in Tamale, Ghana, technically and ecologically "disastrous" modernisation processes and in this context appropriated buildings that define the urban living space in Tamale are explored as 'ruins of our time' and repurposed material as well as the social spaces (Nkrumah Voli-ni, the last space acquired Mahama). Mahama has shown this view of the modern world through his monumental artworks where he a.o. gives select buildings a second skin of scarred jute sacks from Ghana. Now he shares his knowledge through various Re-schoolings with audiences and students in both countries and supports them with ideas on how to exist differently without many resources.

"Many of the projects I have developed in the past have focused on alternative forms of sociality among human and non-human agents, literally bringing people and things into contact as ways to challenge the contemporary cult of the individual and encourage and practice empathy. Working with proximity and intimacy have been core strategies inside past work. The demand for "social distancing" and a newly heightened awareness for how vulnerable we are to each other requires new approaches that nonetheless insist on addressing these topics. This is not a reason to try to translate live experience into online and video formats and avoid contact. We need to insist on the importance of sociability and find new ways to gather in real space and time that takes the new conditions of our lives into account."

– Isabel Lewis, Curatorial Statement on "Existing Otherwise", 2020

THE THREE EXHIBITION VENUES IN TAMALE; GHANA

SCCA Tamale is a monumental contemporary art centre focusing on exhibition creation, research, publication and documentation of practices relevant to socio economic and ecological developments of the 21st and 20th centuries. It is also a cultural repository and residency space for artists that aims to build a community with other artists and curators to share and learn from each other.

Red Clay is a complex of studios. These are multi-purpose spaces for exhibitions, meetings, art talks, film screenings, workshops, and more. There are also dedicated spaces for a library, a cinema hall and a decommissioned aircraft serving as a site for teaching and learning purposes. The building also includes an outdoor atrium with a "pool of ideas" in the middle, which is called The Parliament of Ghosts. Here historical and contemporary humanist ideas are negotiated and challenged in talks and performances.

Nkrumah Voli-ni is a silo building is one of the many independence projects initiated by the first President of Ghana, Dr Kwame Nkrumah, before his overthrow in 1966. The building was originally intended to be a granary and storage for shea nuts, but abandoned after the overthrow of Nkrumah. The now renovated facility is converted into an exhibition venue for science and culture.

RE-SCHOOLING WORKSHOPS

SCCA Tamale, RED CLAY, and NKRUMAH VOLI-NI

14 January – 21 January 2022

14 January 2022 Red Clay 7 pmto build to bury to remember

Performance by Sarah Ama Duah

In "to build to bury to remember" Sarah Ama Duah deals with the deconstruction of monuments and develops hybrid forms between sculpture and body. What alternative forms of sculptural appreciation exist? To whom or what do we want to dedicate them to? How to deal with the empty space that remains when a colonial monument is torn down?

14 January 2022 Red Clay 8 pm

Film programme

I am Somebody

Spanish filmmaker, professor, and artist Eli Cortiñas introduces her curated film programme "I am Somebody" on women finding their own voice in public: Martine Syms (Notes On Gesture 2015, 10'30"), Cecilia Vicuña (What Is Poetry To You? 1980, 23'), Sikarnt Skoolisariyaporn (And That Ocean Too, Is A Fiction 2019, 11'40') and Madeline Anderson (I Am Somebody 1970, 30')

14 and 17 January 2022 Red Clay 12 – 3 pm

Clay sculpting workshop

Artist and sculptor Emily Hunt teaches how to make delicate clay figurines and even power rings in her collaborative workshop which runs in 2 x 2 sessions around the opening in Red Clay (max 20 people, all ages, in each course).

16 January 2022 Red Clay 2 – 4 pm

Textile sculptures workshop

with Sarah Ama Duah

Cotton T-shirts will be the material foundation of the workshop. With an experimental and playful approach we will use T-shirts as material for building a collective sculpture. What are the shirts made of? How can we deconstruct them? From 2D to 3D – inventing new shapes and forms. Along the process we will have a look at examples of artistic fashion approaches and the basics of pattern making. In the second part of the Workshop the participants are invited to experience their artworks by wearing them collectively building volatile sculptures.

Movement Research

Hosted by Maja Smoszna and Malte Pieper

(sign up and please send portfolio and/or CV by 10 January 2022 to sccatamale@gmail.com)

Movement Research - Affective Mapping of Public Spaces proposes an exchange with local artists (visual artists, performers and dancers) in Tamale, Ghana, who are interested in movement and performance sharing. How do I translate my experience of space into movement or artistic practice? How does the designed space influence my movement and community? As a result of the workshop, we would like to develop an experimental performance sharing with participating artists that could (eventually) take place in public spaces in Tamale in the future. The group will explore how bodies move in public space, how the experience of urban design and architecture shapes communities, and how human and non-human activities shape and activate spaces in return. In an exchange with local artists in Tamale, the idea and practice of a public space will be addressed from different perspectives.

20 January 2022 Nkrumah Voli-ni from 3 – 5 pm

A tour and course on Resource Curse

Venezuelan artist and eco-activist Ana Alenso who in her installations functions industrial materials and machines connected to the mining industry, teaches on the subject of resource drain and proposes activist strategies to oppose this tendency. In the course, she will discuss how to create images of the Anthropocene.

21 and 23 January 2022 SCCA Tamale 2 – 4 pmCurating Otherwise

(Please sign up by 17 January 2022 and send portfolio and/or CV to sccatamale@gmail.com)

Curator of festivals, art spaces, and biennials as well as founder of the CURARE curating course, Berlin,

Solvej Helweg Ovesen, teaches the 5 steps of curating an unorthodox show and producing artworks from A to Z in two sessions of 2 hours each, taking you from start to end of your exhibition.
